Mrs. Parkinson's grade 6/7 class has celebrated Zoey's milestones this year. We have seen her sit up, crawl and speak her first words. The students established a strong bond and relationship with Zoey and her mom Donna. We appreciate their dedication to the program and will miss them tremendously.

Food Day Magic Lunchbox

THANKS TO ALL OF OUR PARENT VOLUNTEERS

Twas the night before Monday and throughout Cleveland homes the parents were busy while their kids slept like stones.
The children dreamed sweetly, of their weekend of fun while mom and dad quickly around the place run.
I, in my sweat pants, the spouse with a beer prepare for the school week' cause it's almost here.
The backpacks were flung on the floor without care, five days of old lunches awaited me there.
The mould on the old healthy lunch macaroni, lead me to believe I should serve them baloney.
And under the thermos I find with relief, a library book that's been missing for weeks.
Then notices, trip forms, a cross country jersey, dictes, home reading and something quite furry.
So out to the garbage the furry thing goes, while I sort through the rest and I wash school clothes.
As I try and leaf through a mild soaked agenda I wonder why me, not my kids will remember, that they all have homework that's due in on Monday. My goodness, oh no, I forgot today's Sunday!
And then I hear ringing and I say like a fool, "Of course, its' no problem I'll do the car pool".
As I put down the phone and was turning around down all the stairs came my kids with a bound.
The little ones feverish, the twins are both spotty, their glands are all swollen and they're being quite naughty.
So, with calamine lotion from forehead to feet, and Tylenol given to reduce the heat, I send them away back up the stairs packing, and got on the phone to do some back-tracking.
The car pool, the library the field trip driving, I'll let them all know that I won't be driving. The crossing guard kids won't be guarded by me, and I guess that I'll miss the appreciation tea.
I picked up the phone, held it tight in my hand and did not put it down until things were all planned.
I put on a brave face, took some vitamin c and then I sat down and I watched some TV.
But you know what I say when I'm done for the night?
It's a great life we have, and I turn out the light.
